

Nobody is talking to me about sex! How can healthcare providers have positive sex- related conversations with children and youth with disabilities?

Principal Investigator:
Amy McPherson

CONTACT INFORMATION:

TO ASK QUESTIONS OR TO SIGN UP, CONTACT Amy McPherson at amcpherson@hollandbloorview.ca 416-425-6220 ext. 6378.

Version Date: 24 April 2019
REB: #19-833

Consider taking part in a research study about how healthcare providers should talk about sexuality with children and youth with disabilities.

What is this study about?

We know that health care providers often feel uncertain about how best to talk about sex-related topics with children and youth with disabilities.

We want to hear about the experiences of young adults living with disabilities talking about sex with their healthcare providers and what they wish they had talked about.

Who can participate?

- 18-25 years old
- Living with any form of disability
- Comfortable taking part in a group discussion

What's involved?

- A one-time focus group discussion with other young adults with a disability
- The focus group will last 60-90 minutes
- Focus groups will be held during evenings and weekends
- Light refreshments will be provided
- Parking and TTC tokens will be provided

What are the benefits of participating?

- This study is a first step in helping healthcare providers have positive conversations about sex with children and youth with disabilities